OPENING RECEPTION HELD

The annual opening reception to the new faculty and staff members and the new students was held on the night of September sixteenth. Each of the new students was brought to the head of the line by a senior escort, introduced to Dr. Judson A. Rudd, President Emeritus, and then presented to each of the other members of the faculty and staff. Following the introductions, Lyle Hillegas, senior from Neenah, Wisconsin, took over as master of ceremonies and called on representatives from each class to voice a word of welcome to the new arrivals on the Hill. Speaking for the seniors were Sarah Davis of Greenville, South Carolina, and Mark Davis of Red Jacket, West Virginia. Junior representatives were Lyric Cue of West Chicago, Illinois, and Malcolm Bradshaw of Laurel, Virginia. Joyce Hughes, Greenville, South Carolina, and Roger Hughes of Youngstown, Ohio, spoke for the sophomores. Responses from the freshmen class were given by Sarah Meador of Roanoke, Virginia, and David Jones of Greenville, South Carolina. The interesting feature about all this was that no one knew until called upon who was to do the speaking.

Interspersed through the informative talks, were a piano solo, Chopin’s "Fantasie Impromptu," played by Donna Black, of Littleton, Colo., a vocal solo, the old favorite, "On the Road to Mandalay," sung by James Reese, of Williamson, Mich., and "O Love that Wilt Not Let Me Go," sung by the ladies quartette of the Gospel Messengers, composed of Lois Ringler, Martha King, Judy King, Wilma Anglebrandt. Professor Heydenhurk and Pearl Rathbun, the latter being from Glen Ellyn, Illinois, provided (Continued on page 3)
Freshmen Offer Varied Talent

In the annual Freshman Talent program, held the evening of September 19, the offerings of the freshmen were as varied as enjoyable, including both vocal and instrumental numbers sung and played to a capacity audience in the Memorial Chapel. Professor Gerald Woughter, head of the music department, acted as master of ceremonies, introducing the freshmen as they appeared on the program. Both religious and secular in character, the compositions included within their range both the well-known and the new. The program was as follows.

Those accompanying the various numbers included Alice Tobelmann, Elaine Smetters, David Pates, Ursula Hildebrandt, Janet Cummins, and Sarah Meador.

Sixty-two Conquer Lone Mt.

The first Monday afternoon of the school year saw sixty-two would-be mountain sealers leave the hill for the trek through town, down the highway, and across the fields to the bottom of Lone Mountain. Up to that point, all went well. After that, everybody went, but some, certainly, did not go too well.

The first slopes were conquered rather easily, with a stop now and then for strugglers to catch up. When the last steep climb was reached, several climbers resorted to rather primitive methods of travel and dropped to all fours, grabbing for anything they could get their hands on to keep from sliding back down and having it all do over again. Red of face, short of breath, and wondering why in the world they had come in the first place, everyone finally reached the top to enjoy the customary time of fellowship, chorus singing, and looking for familiar spots in town or over on Bryan Hill, far away across the valley.

The trip down was, to some, at least, largely a matter of gravity, for feet somehow or other refused to stay beneath one, insisting rather, on shooting out into space and permitting all that was above to drop none too gently upon the earth beneath. No bones were broken, but it was quite noticeable the next day that there were those whose aches and pains were uncomfortable reminders that Lone Mountain was, after all, having the last word.
